FARMING WAS ONCE A WAY OF LIFE IN THE VALLEY, BUT IT'S RAPIDLY FADING AWAY

By LAURA FITZGERALD

It was milking time at Old Ford Farm. The cows waited their turn in their stalls, swishing their tails and munching on grain. Each one had a yellow ear tag marked with a name as unique as their personality.

Milker Emma Goertzen led two cows at a time into the trailer that serves as the farm's milking room. Ecuador walked in without protest. La Reina, Spanish for "queen," took more convincing.

"She can be a diva," Goertzen said, pushing the stubborn cow into the truck opening.

Goertzen washed the cows' teats and checked for lumps in their milk before attaching a milker to their udder. The farm's 15 Jersey and Devon-Jersey cows produce on average 250 gallons of milk per week, while the farm's Cornish Cross chickens produce about 300 dozen eggs per week.

The farm also produces turkey and pork products and a two-acre vegetable patch that produced about 30,000 pounds of produce last year.

Owner Becky Fullam was finishing her college career and wondered what she wanted to do with her life. She found sustainable farming as a way to combine her interest in nutrition, the environment and social justice.

When her husband, Joe, visited her while she was completing an internship on a farm in Troy, New York, he found farming as a good use for his degree in engineering.

"So, we decided to start a farm," Fullam said.

The farm practices sustainable agriculture, raising grass-fed cows without the use of synthetic fertilizer, pesticides, herbicides or antibiotics. The chickens and cows are fed with non-genetically modified organism (GMO) grain that is grown without pesticides, herbicides or synthetic fertilizers.

The farm also supports community-supported agriculture, a system that connects the consumer and producer more closely in the food production system by allowing the consumer to subscribe to the harvest of the farm.

While cows do receive a small amount of grain as calves and while lactating, the majority of their diet comes from pasture fertilized by portable chicken and turkey pens and the farm's pig herd.

The Fullam's farm is just one of several dairy farms in the area, an outgrowth of a long and storied past in a state known for its dairy farms.

Owners Becky and Joe Fullam run Old Ford Farm, a dairy and vegetable farm that practices sustainable agriculture.

A LONG HISTORY

Town of Montgomery Historian John Pennings said the land in the Hudson Valley was first divided via patents, or land parcels granted by the king of England. These landowners would then divide the parcels even further and sell them to family farmers.

Most family farms were subsistence farms with a few cows until the end of the nineteenth century, when railroad opened new markets in New York City. It was around this time that the milk industry in New York became centralized, farmers united to form cooperatives and milk dealers dominated the industry, according to Borden Properties: Home Farm and Condensory Historic and Field Research Project Report, by Harold Van Aken.

Originating in Dutchess, Herkimer, Oneida and Orange counties, dairy farming developed into larger operations, such as the Borden Farm in Shawangunk. This was also a period of price fixing and monopolies on milk distribution, until the government took control of the industry to ensure fair pricing and the safety of the product.

Pennings said dairy farming and the general farming industry began declining after the Great Depression and World War II, with the Baby Boomer generation.

That decline in the state and the Hudson Valley has continued to the present day.

A STEADY DECLINE

The number of farms has been on the decline in Orange and Ulster counties, a trend seen throughout New York state.

According to the 2012 United States Department of Agriculture's Census of Agriculture, Orange County had 658 farms in 2012, a decline from 706 in the 2002 census, and Ulster had 486, a decline from 532 in 2002.

This is a faster rate of farm losses than the state. In New York, there were 35,537 farms in 2012 and 37,255 in 2002, a 4.6 percent decrease. Orange County had a 6.8 percent decrease and Ulster had an 8.6 percent decrease over the same ten-year period.

Out of the four towns in the Wallkill Valley, Shawangunk has the fewest farms. Town assessor Curt Schoeberl said the town no longer has any cattle or vegetable farms. While there are still horse farms remaining, Schoeberl said the remaining farm land are hay farms, the last phase of a farm's life.

"We're getting pretty close to being farmless," Schoeberl said.

The farm has 15 Jersey and Devon-Jersey cows.

Milker Emma Goertzen checks a cow's milk for clumps while another is milked by machine.

Vanishing Farmland

Crawford still has five dairy farms, according to town assessor Eileen Reichle. Gardiner has 35 farmers, including horse farmers, town assessor Maureen Gallagher said.

TODAY'S CHALLENGES

Maire Ullrich, agriculture program leader at Cornell Cooperative Extension of Middletown, said there are many obstacles farmers face today, including production costs, market prices, land costs, labor and regulations.

Low market prices aren't keeping pace with the cost of production, causing profits margins to decrease to a point that squeezes out some farmers, Ullrich said. This is especially true for dairy farmers, with the cost of milk staying flat for many years.

"The wholesale farmers still suffer," Ullrich said. "The price that they've received has not changed much in 20 or 30 years in comparison to how much costs of production have increased."

The Fullams understand the need to keep a sustainable profit margin. When pricing their products, the Fullams must find a balance between making a profit and ensuring their products are affordable.

Owner Becky Fullam washes eggs. The farm produces about 300 dozen eggs per week.

The farm's sustainable practices, such as more expensive grain or the labor needed to rotate livestock through the pasture, also makes the operation more expensive than conventional farming practices.

"All of this stuff is stuff we believe in, but it's expensive," Fullam said.

Ullrich said the high cost of land also contributes to farm decline by discouraging new farmers from buying land and encouraging farmers to retire and sell their land for a hefty profit.

The Fullams have faced challenges from high land costs as well. The Fullams lease their land, and while the current owners are accommodating, the potential for new ownership is always present.

The Fullams purchased a plot of land in December about two miles from their current plot after years of searching for an affordable parcel of land, which is still less than ideal for their needs.

"The cost of land around here, it's not something a full-time farmer can afford," Fullam said.

Farmers also face a shortage of labor in Orange County, which forces some farmers to turn to expensive immigrant labor through the H-2A visa program, Ullrich said. Farmers must also contend with new government and market regulations, which are time-consuming and expensive to keep pace with.

Orange and Ulster Farms are closing at a faster rate than the rest of the state. (Ralph M. Aiello Collection)

Ullrich said most of Orange County's farms are small family operated farms. To survive, some farmers diversify their products or consumer markets, which reduces risk and diversifies income. This is a change from decades ago, when monocropping was the best way to turn a large profit.

Ullrich said there are many factors that influence farm production, and the number of farms is just one. Different plots of land and farming methods produce different levels of production.

“It is entirely possible that we could reduce acreage, reduce farm numbers, but have the dollar value of agriculture remain the same,” Ullrich said. “It’s also possible we could reduce farm numbers, but the same number of acres stay in farming because other farmers bought this farmer’s property to continue to farm.”

OLD SOLUTIONS

Despite the challenges, today’s farmers persist, running profitable operations.

On a crisp February day, Fullam pulls out a half gallon of milk from the refrigerator in the trailer that serves as the farm’s store. The milk is bottled in glass Bell jar bottles that customers return to be reused. The store is always open; customers simply write their name down on a clipboard and leave cash on the table.

It’s an old-fashioned honor system in an operation that dives to the roots of farming; the farmers that settled the Hudson Valley did not have today’s pesticides, GMOs, antibiotics or growth hormones.

Fullam’s vision for the future involves more permanent buildings and educational visits for school children. She also just wants to find better ways to farm. For the present, the Fullams will continue to work the land as generations of Hudson Valley farmers have before, facing new challenges with old techniques.

“We absolutely love what we do, and we want to continue what we’re doing,” Fullam said, “but we feel there are a lot of ways to do it better.”

Town of Crawford

History: Crawford was first settled by the Thomas Bull family who, appropriately enough, founded the hamlet of Bullville circa 1760. The hamlet of Pine Bush first came into being circa 1765 when Robert Milliken settled there. The Searsville area was first settled by Johannes Snider circa 1768.

But Crawford was not to become an official township until Mar. 4, 1823, when it was formed from the Town of Montgomery. There has been a recent resurgence in the hamlet with work proceeding to upgrade and restore the Main Street area.

Most of the growth in the outlying areas has been residential, with horse farms a growing land use in recent years. The town now includes nearly 50 square miles and a population of about 7,875.

Town of Gardiner

History: The first settlers were descendants of the New Paltz Patentees and Dutch from the towns of Shawangunk and Rochester. In the later half of the 19th century, Irish families came to settle in Gardiner.

The town was formed April 2, 1854 from the nearby townships of Shawangunk, Rochester and New Paltz. It was named for Addison Gardiner, a Rochester resident who was elected Lieutenant Governor in 1844.

Ireland Corners was settled in 1763 by Daniel Deyo. Two Irishmen, John and Charles Geirigan, settled there in the 1830s and built a small corner store. The Ireland Corners Hotel was built in the late 1800s.

The town's oldest business is the Tuthilltown Grist Mill, which was built in 1788 by Sela Tuthill and has been in operation virtually continuously since then. In addition to the grist mill, the Wallkill River also provided water power for wood and woolen mills.

The first apple orchards began in operation around 1810. Today, the orchards remain a vital part of the Gardiner community.

Town of Montgomery

History: During its earliest settling in the 17th century, it was known as the Precinct of Shawangunk and was originally part of Ulster County. In 1743 it became known as the Precinct of Wallkill and in 1772 the Precinct of Hanover. It received its current name in 1788 in honor of the well-known patriot and soldier, General Richard Montgomery. Montgomery was a Brigadier General in the revolutionary army and died at the storming of Quebec in 1775.

The Town of Montgomery includes 3 waterways, the Tinbrook, Muddykill, and The Wallkill River. The later is celebrated as one of the few rivers to flow north in the Eastern United States. These waterways were ideal sites for Indian settlements, and remnants of there inhabitation are still found today.

In the early 18th century, a man by the name of Cadwallader Colden settled in the area. Colden was named the first surveyor general in 1720, and soon after was named to Governor Burnett's provincial council. In 1761 he became lieutenant governor of New York. He was one of the most learned men of the colonies and was a frequent correspondent of Benjamin Franklin. Colden, also a physician, contributed substantially to a variety of intellectual and scientific fields. He studied botany, physics and philosophy and was published several times on his findings. The area he settled in was called Coldenham, which is the present Coldenham, located off of 17K.

Village of Maybrook

History: The Village of Maybrook was incorporated in 1925. A village, literally built by the railroad, the roots of Maybrook actually date back to 1735, when land was deeded for a highway to be extended from the Town of Shawangunk to Goshen, passing in front of the Goodwill Church.

For many years, the road which is now Route 208 was called the Walden

GOVERNMENT

Road, but in 1950, the portion passing through the village was renamed Homestead Avenue in honor of the early owners of homesteads along this road.

In the early 1880s, this valley was first considered ideal for a railroad line and, in 1883, the first surveys were made for a rail line through the Wallkill Valley, from Hamptonburgh to Montgomery, to connect existing Erie and Lehigh and Hudson Lines. In 1887, plans were unveiled for the construction of the Poughkeepsie Railroad Bridge, enabling goods from all western portions of the country to be delivered to New England and, in return, expedite the flow of industrial products from the New England states to the western portion of the country.

The steel rails were laid in April of 1889 through the settlement of Orange Junction. The name was later changed to Maybrook Junction and, eventually, to Maybrook.

In 1908, the Orange County Railroad began to enlarge the existing railroad yards, buying farmland on the east side of the tracks. The enlargement made Maybrook one of the largest freight terminals in the east.

In 1968, the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad was consolidated with the Penn Central, signaling the beginning of the end of Maybrook as an active railroad town. Lines were diverted and the business began to decline, grinding to a full stop in 1973, when a fire destroyed the Poughkeepsie Railroad Bridge.

Village of Montgomery

History: When James Ward bought a mill on the east side of the Wallkill River in 1740, he built the first bridge across the river and opened up the land for development that would one day become the Village of Montgomery.

The village's history is closely tied in with that of the town when the families of Jacob Bookstaver, Frederick Sinsabaugh and Johannes Youngblood bought an 800-acre tract here in 1735. Before even that date, however, they had journeyed to this area to help found the Brick Reformed Church.

What is now the village was called Ward's Bridge. It was included with the Precinct of Shawangunk in Ulster County until 1743 when it became the Precinct of Wallkill. In 1772, the precinct was divided and that portion containing the village became the Precinct of Hanover.

After the Revolutionary War, Hanover became the Township of Montgomery, named in honor of the general who fell at the Battle of Quebec.

But it wasn't until Feb. 17, 1810 that Ward's Bridge was formally incorporated as the Village of Montgomery. There followed the boom years of the village, with the famous Montgomery Academy growing and many general stores, drug stores, tobacco shops, blacksmiths, carriage shops, newspaper offices and law offices springing up all over. The financial depression that socked the nation in 1830 hit Montgomery as well, and it didn't really recover until ground was broken for the Montgomery Branch Railroad in 1866. Other rail lines followed, and the village boomed again.

Village of Walden

History: The first settlements of the lands surrounding the high falls of the Wallkill occurred in the middle of the 18th century, decades before a wealthy merchant named Jacob Walden found it to his liking.

In the mid-1700s, the land was part of the Wallkill Precinct and was the home of a grist mill believed to have been built by James Kidd and his family in a place they called Kiddtown.

In 1812, a New York City businessman, who had made his fortune as a mercantile trader, visited the area. Jacob Walden and his wife were so impressed, they decided to settle here and bought many of the farmlands along the river, including the old grist mill. The family resided in a stone house at what is now the corner of Wait and North Montgomery Streets and the property of the Historical Society of Walden and the Wallkill Valley. The stone house remained in the Walden family until 1856, when it was sold to Edward Wait.

Walden set out to encourage manufacturers to locate in the area. The Franklin Company, founded in 1822 by Jesse Scofield and Dr. S.C. Capron, was erected at the site of the original grist mill. The company manufactured cotton and woolen goods and by 1934 had become the largest manufacturer of flannel in the U.S.

In 1831, E.W. Bridges was commissioned by Walden to plot and map all of his lands and the adjoining area. It was the first map of what was to become, in 1855, the Village of Walden.

Through the years, Walden gained a reputation for its knife manufacturing industries, with the Alden and the New York Knife Works becoming the major industries of the area around the turn-of-the-century. After the first World War, the knife industry declined and disappeared from the village altogether when Schrade Cutlery moved to Ellenville.

Town of Shawangunk

History: According to local historian Marc B. Fried, the first settler in what was to become Shawangunk was Gertrude Brown, whose deed from the Esopus Indians for the "land named Sawankonck" is dated January 24, 1682. From an ancient map, a copy of which is displayed in Shawangunk Town Hall, it is apparent that Gertrude (a widow) and her three young children actually settled on their land within the next five years. A tract of more than 1,200 acres, lying south of the Bruyn Parcel was obtained by members of the van Camp, Decker, Terwilliger and Shut families, whose October 1694 patent indicates that by that date, the proprietors has already "made considerable improvements by settling, cultivating and manueing the same and whereof thay are now Actually Possest." The Bruyn and van Camp/Decker tracts were along the Shawangunk Kill.

The Precinct of Shawangunk was created in the early 1700s, with Shawangunk officially becoming a township on Mar. 7, 1788.

With an area of about 57 square miles and a population of about 12,022, Shawangunk has seen the hamlet of Wallkill become the business center of the town. Just outside of the hamlet, the Wallkill and Shawangunk Correctional Facilities are big employers there.

Montgomery Montessori School

"One test of the correctness of educational procedure is the happiness of the child." Maria Montessori

Montgomery Montessori School is a learning community where children are inspired to realize their academic, personal, and social potential to become global citizens. The historically proven Montessori educational model supports the whole child, creates lifelong learners, and educates for peace. The resulting academic excellence is supported by a prepared environment that inspires self-paced, individualized discovery, and a love of learning; as well as respect for self, others, and the environment. Come discover the JOY of Montessori.
